

ABSTRACT

An optical apparatus for identification of objects whose identifying data is stored in satellite-aided transmission systems, computer systems, or other electronic systems and a method for identifying objects. An optical apparatus with a fine focus is used to view an object. The position of the apparatus, distance to the object and other data related to the object relative to the apparatus is detected and data about the object is displayed.